The Fight or Flight Dilemma

Fight or flight is an automatic mechanism wired into everyone to help us resolve threats (stressors).

The stresses of modern living are perceived as threats (often subconsciously), but they just don't go away.

- world events (terrorism, wars, disasters)
- problems at work
- too much to do, too little time
- snarled traffic
- too many bills, not enough money
- etc., etc.

The fight or flight mechanism puts our bodies into a “ready mode” to deal with threats. It is supposed to help us quickly and effectively eliminate or evade threats. The sympathetic nervous system and adrenal glands go into overdrive

- blood pressure and heart rate increase
- depth and rate of breathing increase
- blood flow is diverted from organs (notably the digestive system) to muscles
- pupils dilate
- we get mentally “on edge”

Unfortunately, the situations we face in today's world cause the fight or flight mechanism to mobilize resources that are never put to good use.

- energy is wasted
- we suffer physical and mental strain
- we are irritable and anxious
- sleep patterns deteriorate
- immune function declines
- digestive problems develop

Adaptogens - The Stress Busters

These are traditional herbal compounds that modulate inappropriate stress responses. They help restore a balance or harmony in body functions. Depending on the starting point, body activities may be stimulated or suppressed by adaptogens. This means that they can have different effects on different people.

Maximum Velocity™ contains a number of potent adaptogens to reduce the ill effects of stress and to conserve energy resources. Results:

- much improved sense of well-being
- more energy
- better sleep
- improved general health
- better immune function

Chronic stress has a particularly bad impact on the immune system. It leads to excess production of hormones that suppress immune function. Adaptogens reduce this effect. Also, most of the adaptogenic herbs in Maximum Velocity™ also supply potent compounds that directly signal the immune system to function.
